

CareerPassport — For Companies

The single idea the page must communicate

CareerPassport should make a hiring manager feel:

“I can explain who I need once. CareerPassport can build and run the machinery required to find, engage and evaluate those people—and bring me the candidates worth spending my time with.”

That is the core of the Companies proposition.

CareerPassport is not simply an ATS.

It is not simply an assessment platform.

It is not simply a sourcing tool.

And it should not be positioned as another AI copilot that gives suggestions while the hiring manager continues doing all the work.

CareerPassport is an agentic hiring system that converts hiring intent into an executable hiring process and helps operate that process until human judgment is genuinely required.

1. WHO IS THIS PAGE FOR?

The hero is the Hiring Manager

The emotional centre of the page is the person who has a business problem because a role needs to be filled.

They may be a:

- Business leader
- Functional head
- Engineering manager
- Sales leader
- Product leader
- Operations leader
- Founder
- Department head

They do not wake up wanting to “run a recruitment process.”

They want the right person on their team.

But today, between identifying that need and actually meeting strong candidates, a large amount of work gets created:

Defining the role.

Writing the JD.

Explaining the requirement to recruiters.

Defining competencies.

Creating evaluation criteria.

Deciding interview stages.

Designing assessments.

Reviewing CVs.

Coordinating recruitment partners.

Following up with candidates.

Scheduling.

Re-explaining the requirement.

Conducting screening conversations.

Trying to understand whether a CV claim represents genuine capability.

CareerPassport should communicate:

You define who you need.

We help turn that intent into the hiring system required to find them.

2. THE SECONDARY AUDIENCE

The sponsor may still be the:

CHRO / Head of Talent

They care about standardisation, governance, candidate experience, visibility and efficiency.

Business Leadership

They care about hiring speed and quality.

Finance / Procurement

They care about productivity, vendor management and cost.

The page should give these audiences enough enterprise confidence to support the purchase.

But the page should never become an HR-software page at the expense of the hiring manager.

The hiring manager should think:

"This gives me my time back."

The organisation should think:

"This gives us a better hiring system."

3. THE CORE PRODUCT STORY

There is a very simple product journey underneath everything CareerPassport does.

Tell us who you need.

CareerPassport turns that intent into the infrastructure required to hire them.

It can generate:

The Role

What are we actually hiring for?

The Competency Framework

What capabilities matter for success?

The Candidate Journey

What should a candidate go through to demonstrate those capabilities?

The Evaluation Framework

What should CareerPassport and humans look for at different stages?

The Communication Package

How should candidates be approached, informed, followed up with and progressed?

Once this is configured, CareerPassport can help execute the process.

This is a critical distinction:

CareerPassport doesn't just help you design hiring.

CareerPassport helps you run it.

4. THE PAGE SHOULD OPEN WITH OUTCOME, NOT FEATURES

Recommended hero direction

Tell us who you need.

Meet the people worth your time.

Describe the person you're looking for.

CareerPassport can turn that intent into a complete hiring journey—from role definition and evaluation to candidate engagement, evidence collection and coordination—so your time goes into the decisions that actually need you.

Book a demo

Post a role

Alternative high-level proposition:

The work before the interview, handled.

Tell CareerPassport who you need. It helps create the role, build the evaluation journey, engage candidates, coordinate partners and surface the evidence—before your hiring team steps in.

Both messages communicate the same philosophy:

CareerPassport should remove work, not simply digitise it.

5. SECTION ONE — FROM HIRING INTENT TO A READY-TO-RUN ROLE

The first product revelation should be that CareerPassport understands the requirement rather than simply giving the hiring manager another form to fill.

A hiring manager should be able to describe the requirement conversationally.

For example:

“I need a senior product manager who has built B2B SaaS products, understands enterprise customers, has worked through ambiguity and can operate with engineering and sales.”

From that intent, CareerPassport can help construct:

Role definition

Competencies

Success criteria

Candidate Journey

Assessments

Evaluation criteria

Candidate communications

The message:

Start with what you need.

CareerPassport builds what the hiring process needs.

This is one of the strongest demonstrations of intelligence in the product and should appear early.

6. SECTION TWO — DESIGN THE CANDIDATE JOURNEY

CareerPassport should not overuse the word “assessment.”

The CareerPassport concept is broader.

We should call it a:

Candidate Journey

or selectively:

Candidate Trip

A Candidate Journey defines what someone should experience and demonstrate before progressing through a particular opportunity.

Depending on the role, that journey could contain:

- CareerPassport-native assessments
- Questions
- Conversations
- Work samples
- Evidence requests
- Role-specific tasks
- Third-party assessments where required
- Human interactions

The hiring manager decides what matters.

CareerPassport helps turn that into a structured journey.

The message:

Don't just decide who to interview.

Decide what you need to know before you interview them.

This moves CareerPassport away from CV filtering and towards structured evidence gathering.

7. SECTION THREE — LET THE SYSTEM RUN THE REPETITIVE WORK

Once the hiring journey is designed, CareerPassport should show its agentic capability.

The system can help:

Engage candidates

Send communications

Follow up

Move candidates through stages

Coordinate assessments

Manage scheduling

Coordinate recruitment partners

Maintain candidate communication

Bring information back into one hiring workflow

CareerPassport currently connects into important communication and workflow channels including:

- Gmail
- WhatsApp
- Calendar
- LinkedIn

But integrations should support the story rather than becoming the story.

The stronger message is:

Design the process once.

Let CareerPassport help operate it.

8. AUTOMATION SHOULD NEVER FEEL LIKE LOSS OF CONTROL

This is an important enterprise product principle.

CareerPassport supports different operating modes.

Some organisations or hiring managers may want:

Full automation

Others may want:

Human approval before particular actions

CareerPassport should therefore communicate:

Your process. Your guardrails. Your level of autonomy.

Agents can execute within the boundaries defined by the organisation or hiring manager.

This allows CareerPassport to communicate powerful automation without making the buyer feel that an opaque AI system is independently running recruitment.

The system operates.

The humans remain accountable.

9. SECTION FOUR — CANDIDATES CAN COME FROM ANYWHERE

CareerPassport should not create the impression that companies must abandon their existing talent ecosystem.

The candidate can originate from:

The organisation's existing database

Inbound applicants

Recruitment partners

CareerPassport professionals

Potentially other sourcing channels as the ecosystem expands.

Therefore the message should be:

Wherever candidates come from, give them one hiring standard.

The source can differ.

The candidate journey does not need to.

The communication standard does not need to.

The evaluation framework does not need to.

The hiring manager should get one consistent view.

This is particularly important for enterprise adoption because CareerPassport becomes an orchestration layer rather than another closed candidate marketplace.

10. SECTION FIVE — MULTIPLE RECRUITMENT PARTNERS, ONE HIRING PROCESS

Recruitment partners are an important part of the ecosystem, but on the Companies page they should be presented from the hiring manager's perspective.

The pain is not simply:

"I have several recruitment vendors."

The pain is:

"Every vendor interprets my requirement differently, sends information differently and forces my team to reconstruct the hiring process."

CareerPassport gives the organisation a shared system around the role.

Partners can participate.

Candidates can come through different partners.

But the organisation can retain:

- One role definition
- One competency framework
- One Candidate Journey
- One communication standard
- One evaluation philosophy
- One place to review progress

The message:

More partners shouldn't mean more process.

or:

Different sources. One hiring standard.

11. SECTION SIX — MOVE FROM CLAIMS TO EVIDENCE

This is where CareerPassport's professional ecosystem creates a significant distinction.

Hiring today is heavily claim-driven.

A CV says someone did something.

A LinkedIn profile says someone has a skill.

An interview asks them to explain it.

CareerPassport should help the hiring manager see more context before making that judgment.

But we need to be precise with our language.

CareerPassport should not indiscriminately claim that everything is “verified.”

Instead CareerPassport can provide:

Evidence

Provenance

Context

Signals

Supporting artefacts

Verification signals where available

Assessment outcomes

Work samples

The company ultimately decides whether that evidence satisfies its hiring standard.

Therefore the message should be:

See the evidence behind the experience.

Not:

“Every candidate is verified.”

A candidate might bring:

- Career experience
- Project work
- Work samples
- Assessments completed
- Relevant artefacts
- Association signals
- Education signals
- Recognition
- CareerPassport evidence
- Other supporting proof

CareerPassport can organise these into something a hiring manager can actually review.

The critical distinction is:

CareerPassport furnishes the evidence and signals.

The employer makes the judgment.

12. SECTION SEVEN — THE HUMAN HANDOFF

This should become one of the most emotionally compelling parts of the page.

By the time a hiring manager becomes deeply involved, CareerPassport should have helped assemble:

Who the candidate is

Why they may fit

What has been evaluated

What evidence supports that view

How they performed through the Candidate Journey

What remains uncertain

What the hiring manager should explore

Therefore:

When you finally meet them, start where it matters.

Don't spend the first 30 minutes reconstructing a résumé.

Don't ask someone to repeat information that could already have been gathered.

Don't make every interviewer rediscover the same candidate.

CareerPassport should make the interview a higher-value human interaction.

This reinforces a fundamental CareerPassport philosophy:

Automate coordination.

Structure evaluation.

Elevate human judgment.

13. WHAT THE COMPANY ACTUALLY GETS

Avoid a generic SaaS block saying:

"Efficiency."

"Automation."

"Insights."

Those words are too abstract.

Translate capabilities into outcomes.

Less hiring administration

The hiring manager does not need to manually operate every part of the process.

A repeatable hiring standard

Roles, evaluations, candidate journeys and communications become structured.

Better signal before interviews

Decision-makers can review evidence and context rather than relying primarily on résumé claims.

Fewer low-value interview hours

Humans enter the process with more information.

Better recruitment-partner coordination

Multiple partners can participate without creating multiple parallel processes.

More control over automation

Teams decide where agents can act autonomously and where approval is required.

One system across candidate sources

Existing databases, partners and CareerPassport candidates can participate in the same hiring journey.

14. WHAT CAREERPASSPORT SHOULD NOT SOUND LIKE

The page should avoid becoming:

“An AI-powered ATS”

Too small.

“An AI recruitment assistant”

Too passive.

“A sourcing marketplace”

Only one part of the ecosystem.

“An assessment platform”

Only one stage of the workflow.

“AI that hires people for you”

Wrong philosophy and creates unnecessary trust concerns.

The stronger territory is:

An agentic hiring operating system.

or:

An intelligent operating layer for hiring.

However, the page does not need to repeatedly use either category phrase.

The product experience should demonstrate the category.

15. THE DIFFERENTIATION TO PROTECT

Automation alone will not remain differentiated.

Many recruiting platforms will eventually claim that agents can:

Send emails.

Schedule interviews.

Screen candidates.

Generate JDs.

CareerPassport's story is stronger when these capabilities come together.

Hiring Intent

CareerPassport understands what the organisation wants.

Hiring Design

It creates the role, competency framework, evaluation framework and Candidate Journey.

Agentic Execution

It helps operate communications, candidate progression, coordination and scheduling.

Source-Agnostic Orchestration

Candidates can arrive through internal databases, partners or CareerPassport.

Evidence

Candidates progress with richer signals and supporting proof.

Human Judgment

The hiring manager spends time where their expertise matters.

This entire sequence is CareerPassport.

No single feature should become the product story.

16. TRUST AND ENTERPRISE CREDIBILITY

CareerPassport already has meaningful real-world operating experience through pilot organisations and actual hiring outcomes.

The website does not need to aggressively advertise precise numbers if the company does not want to.

Instead, credibility can initially come through selective:

Customer testimonials

Company logos where permission exists

Short hiring-manager stories

Specific qualitative outcomes

For example:

“CareerPassport helped us turn a requirement into a structured evaluation process and gave our hiring managers far more context before the interview.”

Testimonials should ideally come from people close to the hiring problem rather than generic corporate endorsements.

Four or five strong testimonials will likely be more consistent with the brand than a large wall of logos.

17. RECOMMENDED PAGE FLOW

The page should tell one continuous story.

01 — HERO

Tell us who you need. Meet the people worth your time.

Establish the outcome.

02 — HIRING INTENT

Show the hiring manager explaining the requirement.

Start with what you need.

03 — CAREERPASSPORT BUILDS THE HIRING SYSTEM

Role → Competencies → Candidate Journey → Evaluation → Communication

CareerPassport turns hiring intent into a ready-to-run process.

04 — CANDIDATE JOURNEY

Show how candidates demonstrate what matters for this role.

Decide what you need to know before you meet them.

05 — AGENTIC EXECUTION

Engagement → Follow-up → Progression → Scheduling → Coordination

Let the process move without operating every step yourself.

06 — CONTROL

Full autonomy or approval-driven workflows.

Your process. Your guardrails.

07 — CANDIDATES FROM ANYWHERE

Database + Partners + CareerPassport + Other sources

Different sources. One hiring standard.

08 — EVIDENCE

Show the evidence and signals behind experience.

See more than the claim.

09 — HUMAN DECISION

Present the hiring manager with a smaller set of relevant candidates and much richer context.

Meet fewer candidates. Know more about the ones you do.

10 — BUSINESS OUTCOMES

Less administration.

Higher process consistency.

Better coordination.

Better signal.

More valuable interview time.

11 — SOCIAL PROOF

Selected customer voices.

12 — FINAL CTA

Your next hire shouldn't require you to operate the entire hiring process.

Tell CareerPassport who you need.

Book a demo

Post a role

18. THE EMOTIONAL TRANSFORMATION

The designer should understand that the page is ultimately illustrating a transformation.

BEFORE CAREERPASSPORT

"I need to hire someone."

becomes

"Now I have to operate a recruitment project."

WITH CAREERPASSPORT

"I need to hire someone."

becomes

"I explain what I need, define the important decisions and CareerPassport helps build and operate the process around me."

That is the product promise.

19. THE ONE SENTENCE EVERYONE WORKING ON THIS PAGE SHOULD REMEMBER

If the copywriter, designer, product team or animator remembers only one thing, it should be this:

CareerPassport takes a hiring manager's intent, turns it into a structured hiring journey, helps execute that journey across candidates and partners, assembles the evidence, and brings humans in where human judgment matters most.

Everything on the Companies page should help a visitor understand or believe that sentence.

Nothing should distract from it.
